Processing Information:

Photographs have all been grouped together, as have technical manuals. All of the retirement photographs, (boxes 19-20), are organized chronologically. This was done because the subject matter revolved around retirement parties, often with multiple individuals being honored at the same event. This led to one odd grouping where Al Lane is listed twice (box 19, file 34 and box 20, file 1). The first was his luncheon, and the second, the party itself.

Historical Note:

The Tired Old Men (TOM) club is a group of several hundred retired Frigidaire employees and supervisors who meet monthly and keep in touch with one-another. They saved and accumulated numerous photographs, sound recordings, documents, and other memorabilia.

Frigidaire formed in 1916 as the Guardian Refrigerator Company and merged with Delco-Light to become Frigidaire Corporation in 1926. It then became part of General Motors Corporation in 1933. During the Second World War, Frigidaire retooled their manufacturing plants to support the war effort, building machine guns and propellers. By the 1950s, Frigidaire was producing refrigerators, freezers, air conditioners, washers, dryers, electric stoves and ovens. In 1979, the company was sold to White Consolidated Industries and again to Electrolux in 1986, which ended all production.

Scope and Content:

This collection spans more than 90 years' worth of Frigidaire history as collected and preserved by members of the TOM (Tired Old Men) Club. The material is divided into series and subseries, and then further arranged into major groupings to aid in quickly locating relevant documents.

Series I: T.O.M. Club, 1919-2013, contains documents on the history of the TOM Club and the history of Frigidaire as written by TOM club members. The most comprehensive history is a presentation titled "The Frigidaire Story: End of an Era" by TOM Club member Gailard "Red" Ketcham. Administrative documents, membership lists, and club rosters and newsletters spanning the years 1986-2013 are also included.

Series II: Frigidaire, circa 1918-2008, covers the history of the Frigidaire company. It includes administrative information and employee newsletters. There is also promotional material and appliance information which includes parts catalogs, technical bulletins, and installation and operation instructions. The appliance information mostly dates from the 1950s-1970s.

Series III: Audio / Visual Media, 1921-2010, undated, contains audio and visual media relating to both the TOM Club and the Frigidaire company. Numerous photographs of retirement and Christmas parties, as well as photographs of products and production are included, mostly from the 1950s and 60s. Audio media in this section includes audiocassettes and audio disc records, many of which are promotional. Much of the audiocassette content was recorded by the donor to the audiocassettes. Also included are VHS videocassettes of Frigidaire history content, and Frigidaire film strips. Of note are the slides, which are also in digital form, of Gailard "Red" Ketcham's presentation titled "The Frigidaire Story: End of an Era". Series I contains the typed script to this presentation.

Series IV: Artifacts, 1942-1981, undated, consists of various artifacts collected by TOM club members during their working lives. These range from pin badges and key chains to a bullet, produced on a Frigidaire production line during World War II.

Frigidaire played an important role in the war effort of the 1940s. While the collection offers some information about this valuable function, it does not mention many of the manufacturing specifics of how the assembly lines were retooled. However, information is included on the quantity of Browning .30 caliber machineguns, and three- and four-blade propellers shipped.
